Gimme Danish indie rock

For years, American bands have tried to fill the strange-shaped gap left by the demise of Pavement. This year alone we've had commendable efforts from The Spinto Band and Tapes'n Tapes, but here's a contender from Europe. Gravy mastermind Nikolaj Grummesgård is part of Copenhagen's exciting new PonyRec stable, and he's created a delicious album of quirky indie rock, smothered with electronic fizz and vague hints of psychedelia. Most importantly, on the likes of "Party In The Mens Room", he's also written some great pop songs. NATHANIEL CRAMP
